Monthly comment

In December, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure declined in value as towers, regulated utilities and toll roads performed weakly. While towers remained the best performing sub-sector in 2020, H2 has been challenging. Regulated utilities have been a stable performer this year, but in Q4 especially, they have underperformed broader markets as there has been a clear preference among investors for cyclical sectors. On the other hand, railroads and airports along with data centres performed well in the portfolio.

TC Energy, a North American energy infrastructure company was the worst performer this month as it is likely to face greater challenges from the Biden administration to complete the Keystone XL pipeline, even though the company has committed to the project, and has established an at-the-market equity program to partially fund it.

The Spanish tower operator Cellnex was another weak performer during the month even though the company has been the best performer in the portfolio in 2020. After signing three large deals during the year, there are growing concerns that its M&A pipeline may get exhausted. Nevertheless, Cellnex remains in prime position in a very fragmented market in Europe and the M&A pipeline remains robust.

Finally, the Fund invested in Orsted, its first renewables investment. The Danish company is a global leader in developing, constructing, and managing offshore wind farms and had a promising performance this month. There were multiple news about the company, but the most significant were Orsted signing a deal to sell its stake in an offshore wind park in Taiwan, and a long-term PPA signed with Amazon in Europe.
