Monthly comment

After continuous inflow into the stock market throughout the summer, investor sentiment shifted in September with a spike in volatility in the second part of the month. The global equity markets performed weakly, with growing concerns over the potential default of Evergrande, China's largest property developer, higher inflation, and a possible stagflation scenario. Government yields rose during the month as both the Federal Reserve and the Bank of England signaled rate increases for early next year. Energy prices continued to remain elevated, also contributing to the negative sentiment during the month. In this context, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure performance was also weak. Rate-sensitive sectors, such as regulated utilities and towers, were the weakest performers.

On a portfolio level, European airport operators including Flughafen Zurich and ADP were among the best performers in September. Their share prices rose on the back of positive news flow regarding the easing of travel restrictions. In particular, the US announced it will relax COVID-19 travel restrictions for fully vaccinated travelers from Europe and the UK, aiming to adopt the policy from November 2021.

Chinese gas distributors' equities such as ENN Energy and China Resources Gas performed weak during the month due to concerns over high gas prices, as well as Evergrande's liquidity constraints having a ripple effect on the broader Chinese market. Investor worries are primarily on lower dollar margins, as higher gas prices can be passed through to end customers only with a time delay. Towards the end of the month, the Chinese government also ordered factory shutdowns in some provinces to curb power consumption, which will likely reduce industrial gas volumes in the second part of the year.
