Monthly comment

In June, global equity markets continued their weak performance, with S&P 500 recording its worst first half year performance since 1970. During the first half year of 2022, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure has been much more stable compared to the broader market indices. June's sharp decline was largely driven by continued investor concerns around persistent inflation and interest rate pressure, which have subdued the outlook for global economic growth. Economic data in both the US and Europe came in weaker than expected, with Eurozone PMI readings falling to the lowest level since February 2021. Though infrastructure also fell in the month, it continued to provide greater stability and outperformed global equities indices. The Fund also outperformed the benchmark, largely as a result of weak performance among energy stocks as oil prices fell over 10%, as well as due to the underweight to airports, which performed poorly. Regionally, Chinese equities performed the strongest, whereas European and emerging market equities were the weakest.

On a portfolio level, Transurban extended its gain in the month on the back of the continued improvement in traffic as travel-related restrictions have eased in Australia. The company also announced dividend distributions in line with pre-pandemic levels.

In contrast, European Airports declined in value. After a fairly strong start to the year, the European airports fell during the month of June. In spite of some traffic forecast for 2022 being raised, the airports struggled with rising inflation, workers' strikes leading to cancelled flights, as well as an uptick in COVID cases across Europe.

Another negative performer was the US gas pipeline operator Williams. In line with the whole US pipeline sector, the companies share price suffered as a result of falling oil prices and increased concern around an economic slowdown.
