Monthly comment

Global equity markets have started the year on a stronger footing, as there were signs both in the US as well as in Europe that inflation may have peaked and could show a moderately declining trend in the future. While the labor market remained tight, encouraging data from US, whose economy rose in Q4 at an annualized rate of 2.9%, supported investor sentiment. Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure performed good in January, with transport and communication infrastructure sectors performing the best. Among regions, China and developed markets performed strongly, while emerging markets, especially Brazil, was the major laggard in the portfolio.

The European airport operators (Aena, Flughafen Zurich, ADP) in the portfolio performed very strongly in January. The stocks benefitted from the recovering passenger numbers in the previous months. The Swiss airport operator, Flughafen Zurich, reported an 80 % surge in December 2022 passenger traffic. Aena is considered a major beneficiary of a resumption in air travel, especially for short-haul, leisure-driven, international traffic. The Spain-based operator is also expected to benefit from an electricity cost tailwind in 2023.

Finally, Cellnex Telecom, the Spanish telecommunications service provider, was among the best performing companies in January. After news of a possible takeover emerged, Cellnex's share price has risen strongly. Various media have reported that the US operator of equipment for wireless communications American Tower and the global alternative asset manager Brookfield Asset Management are planning to acquire Cellnex Telecom. While this information is unconfirmed, and neither of the two companies have yet publicly commented on the potential transaction, we believe Cellnex is attractively valued and could be a good fit for either of the two companies, though there are regulatory barriers to a potential transaction.
