Monthly comment

In November, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure continued to increase in value, beating the broader equity market. Inflation figures, interest rate expectations and the ongoing Covid restrictions in China remained the dominant market drivers. US inflation showed the first signs of moderation, with core consumer price index growing only 0.3% from the previous month, and the Fed Chair signaled a slower pace of rate increases. Listed infrastructure companies continued to report solid Q3 earnings during the month, signaling that the sector fundamentals have remained intact. All subsectors contributed positively to the Fund's performance, with transmission & distribution and data centers performing best. In particular, transmission & distribution utilities, the largest subsector in the Fund, continued to report solid earnings growth, independently of commodity prices. In terms of regions, Chinese and North American stocks outperformed, whereas Brazil was the only negative contributor.

The Chinese gas distributors China Resources Gas and ENN Energy were the best performing stocks within the portfolio. In response to the public debate and protests against the zero-Covid policy in China, government officials signaled a softer stance on Covid restrictions. In addition, easing concerns on the Chinese real estate market also helped the sector, as the Chinese government unveiled a comprehensive plan to boost liquidity in the property sector.

Finally, Equinix, the US data center operator, was among the best performers in November. The company reported solid figures for Q3. Quarterly revenues increased by 10%, representing the company's 79th consecutive quarter of revenue growth. Furthermore, EBITDA increased by 11% compared to the same quarter last year, as operating costs were lower than planned. Despite inflationary pressures, Equinix has not seen a slow-down in demand for its interconnection-rich data centers and we remain confident that Equinix will be a secular growth story.
