Monthly comment

Global equity markets performed negatively in August as investors worried that the Federal Reserve will continue with aggressive rate hikes. While US inflation eased slightly in July, hawkish comments from Chairman Powell interrupted the market rally in August, as the fight against inflation remains the Federal Reserve top priority, despite increasing recession risks. At the same time, European energy prices reached record levels during the month, already causing significant pain to economic growth in the region. In this context, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure also performed negatively. The less rate sensitive subsectors, such as waste managers and airports, performed best during the month, while digital infrastructure assets, namely towers and datacenters, lagged. All regions performed negatively except for Brazilian stocks, with European stocks continuing to underperform their North American counterparts.

Rumo, the Brazilian railway operator, reported strong quarterly results. After volumes disappointed in the first part of the year due to unfavorable weather, management described an improving environment, expecting a strong corn harvest and better pricing in the second part of the year. Rumo maintains a strong competitive position, as its assets are essential to support agricultural exports, especially during times of high commodity prices and food shortages. In contrast, Orsted, a global renewable asset operator, was the worst performer during the month. While the company increased full-year guidance, higher costs and weak performance in offshore wind worried investors. More recently, the discussion around windfall taxes in the UK and the upcoming reform of the EU energy market further added uncertainties for renewable operators.

The US waste managers Republic Services and Waste Management posted strong results, raising 2022 guidance, primarily driven by better pricing and profitability. Furthermore, both companies reported >5% pricing growth in Q2 and waste volumes also continued to rise. Given their market position, we believe US waste managers have strong pricing power, being able to pass through most cost increases (i.e. fuel) to end customers.
