Monthly comment

The weakness of global equity markets continued in September, with several major indices recording the worst monthly performance of the year. Investors' concerns were driven by soaring bond yields, rising oil prices, and slowing growth. The AI-powered tech rally that previously drove equity performance also cooled off, while a hawkish tone from central banks and the prospect of higher rates for longer have increased concerns for a possible recession. Against this backdrop, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure Fund decreased in September, particularly in the second half of the month. Despite a solid earnings season, most subsectors suffered from the broader market sell-off, with rising bond yields notably affecting communication REITs. Other sectors such as water and renewables performed poorly, whereas toll roads and utilities showed more resilience and performed better. All geographies contributed negatively, except for China, which recovered following a weak August.

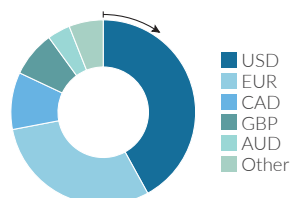

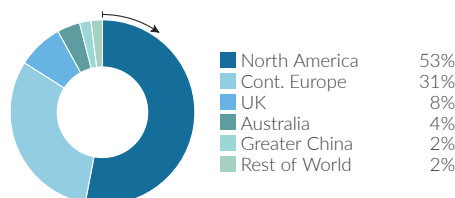

China's gas utilities stood out as the best performing sector during the month, bouncing back from a weak month in August and led the performance within the fund. Although there wasn't any company or industry-specific news, some investors became incrementally positive about the sector following robust macro data in August and nationwide property relaxation measures. Analysts upgraded the Chinese energy companies ENN and China Resources Gas to overweight, with volumes improving, while valuations remain attractive.

In contrast, renewables such as Orsted and Boralex continued to struggle in September. Orsted, a Danish renewable energy company specialized in offshore wind energy, which previously warned of over USD 2 billion of impairments to its US renewables portfolio, was downgraded by analysts, and Moody's cut the outlook to negative. As for Boralex, a Canadian renewable energy company that specializes in the development, construction, and operation of renewable energy power plants, there were no company-specific news, but the stock traded down along with the rest of the industry due to uncertainties surrounding the global economy, as well as the impact of rising bond yields.
