Monthly comment

Global equity markets rose in May, driven by the strong performance of large-cap US technology companies, which was due to investor excitement about the future prospects of Artificial Intelligence (AI). Although there was some volatility caused by the uncertainty over a US government default, an agreement to raise the debt ceiling was reached days before the deadline. In this context, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Listed Infrastructure Fund remained stable and outperformed the benchmark. Data centers was the best performing sector, as generative AI applications are expected to generate growing demand for data center capacity, on top of the secular growth in both colocation and interconnection. On the other hand, pipelines performed weakly, as lower commodity prices and growth concerns impacted sentiment on the sector. Brazilian stocks were among the best performers during the month, driven by slowing inflation in the country and optimism about potential easing of monetary policy. The new government also stepped up pressure to lower interest rates, which would benefit infrastructure stocks.

Rumo, the Brazilian railroad operator, was among the best performing companies in May, reporting strong Q1 results, especially on higher tariffs, which grew 28% year-over-year. We believe that Rumo's strong competitive position will allow the company to increase prices while continuing to grow volumes. Moreover, Brazilian soybean and corn production, which make up approximately 70% of Rumo's volumes, are expected to increase double-digit in 2023.

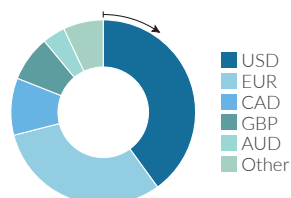

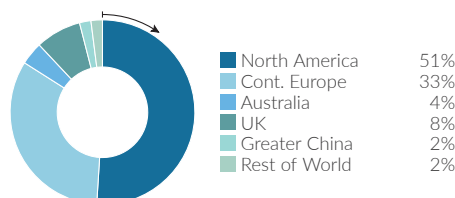

On the other hand, Enbridge, the Canadian pipeline operator, performed poorly, despite posting solid Q1 results and reaching an early-stage agreement with shippers on the Mainline, the company's largest pipeline system. Enbridge's shares were hit due to falling commodity prices and macroeconomic concerns. As oil prices are expected to remain volatile, we prefer gas pipeline operators, as gas demand tends to be less dependent on the economic cycle and benefits from growing LNG exports.

Finally, CTEEP was another strong performer in May. The Brazilian electric grid operator, grew revenue and EBITDA by 25% and 39% year-over-year, respectively. The utility continues to increase its capex program, both in greenfield projects and grid reinforcement, while remaining disciplined on costs and maintaining a prudent financial structure.
