Monthly comment

In December, the global equity markets saw a rebound, thanks to favorable company-specific developments and lower inflation rates. Federal Reserve officials expect a few rate cuts in 2024, which raised optimism among investors that the rate cycle had peaked. As a result, government bond yields declined, with the 10-year yields in the US and Germany respectively dropping below 4% and 2%. Against this backdrop, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV-Listed Private Equity Fund had a significant increase of 8.8% and ended 2023 with growth of 33.9%.

The best performing holding during the month was TPG, a US-based private equity firm. The company recently acquired the private debt-focused manager, Angelo Gordon, and is now focusing on the integration. This acquisition positions TPG well to also expand into the insurance segment, which is expected to be a key AUM growth driver. Moreover, TPG has secured a USD 1.5 billion commitment from Alterra, a large private investment vehicle that specializes in climate change, is backed by the UAE.

The French private equity firm, Eurazeo, was another good performer in December. The management team recently announced a significant shift in strategy. Their plan involves actively reducing the balance sheet and focusing on expanding the asset management business. Management intends to return 42% of the market capitalization over the next four years, primarily through share buybacks, which will be beneficial for the Net Asset Value (NAV) given the discount of approximately 50%, and to a lesser extent through dividends.

Finally, Investor AB, a Sweden-based investment company, recently held its Capital Markets Day and announced the appointment of Christian Cederholm as the new CEO. He previously served as the head of the private equity portfolio and is expected to put a focus on private investments. The portfolio has been performing well, with NAV growth of 15% over the past five years, and most portfolio companies holding leading market positions. Mölnlycke, the largest private holding, continues to perform positively, with sales growth of over 7% during the first three quarters of 2023 and plans to further expand into Latin America, Japan, and China.
