Monthly comment

In March, the Partners Group Listed Investments SICAV - Multi Asset Income gained in value, largely driven by a strong rebound in infrastructure and real estate. In particular, the infrastructure sector was positively affected by the news in relation to President Biden's USD 2 trillion infrastructure plan and faster economic recovery in some major countries with high vaccination rates. Overall, the global equity markets had a positive month and recorded 52-week highs.

Atmos Energy, the U.S. regulated gas distributor based in Texas, was one of the weakest performers in February after an uncommon cold wave struck Texas. However, the company recovered sharply after it became clear that their gas costs would be less affected by the Arctic freeze than previously expected. Subsequently, the company successfully issued debt at an attractive interest rate. Furthermore, the regulator is likely to allow the company to pass on the rise in gas costs to consumers, enabling the recovery of these costs.

In contrast, shares of Apax Global Alpha, a direct investment company, dipped on 19 March, with the news that Australia's sovereign wealth fund will sell its 6.7% equity stake in the company at GBP 180 a share, which represents a 14% discount to the closing price on 18 March. The divestment was not driven by a company-specific reason, but the fund wished to take profit after years of investing in the company.

Finally, Shenzhen Expressway was amongst the best performers this month. Positive financial figures for the year 2020 boosted the share price. Revenues were up 25% driven by two environmental projects acquired in 2019. Forward looking, one of the largest projects to the company, Outer Ring Road, opened in late 2020 and saw high volume of traffic in January 2021 already, accompanied by high-than-expected daily income compared the company's guidance.
